APA Style Citations & References
A Guide for Psychology Undergraduates

Why Cite?

Whenever you report something that you have read, you have an ethical and a practical responsibility to cite where you read it. Ethically, you need to give credit to other authors for their words and ideas. Practically, citations identify your sources to the interested reader. Citing sources is essential in research papers, which rely heavily on empirical evidence.

When you cite references, use the conventions of the discipline, so that key information appears in a consistent way that everyone can understand. Psychology research articles usually use the style of the American Psychological Association (APA). Other common styles are that of the Modern Language Association (MLA), which you may have learned in English classes, and the Council of Biological Editors (CBE), commonly used in the biological literature. Research in the area of animal behavior is published in both psychology and biology journals. When you read research articles, you may encounter APA, CBE, or other formats.

This guide explains how to use APA format for citations. When you write a paper for a psychology course, you are expected to use the format in this guide unless your instructor gives different requirements. For more details about using APA style, see Publication Manual of the American Psychological Association (6th ed.), also referred to as the "APA manual".
Ethics

Cite only work that you have actually read. If you read about a book or article but did not actually read the source yourself, your citation needs to make clear what you did and did not read (see "Secondary Sources" later in this guide).

When you write about something that you have read, you must not only cite your source but also paraphrase the ideas that you present (quoting is uncommon in scientific writing; see "Quotes" later in this guide). Although you may not realize it, you are plagiarizing if you just change a few words around (see "Plagiarism and Student Writing" at our website). If you avoid looking at the author's words while you are trying to explain an idea, it is easier to present an author's idea in an original way.

Citations and the References Page

There are two parts to completing the citation of a source. You must cite the source in the text of the paper, and you must list all sources, in a standardized format, on the References page. First, we discuss the References page, then we explain citations in the text.

Sample in-text references: Examples

Example 1:

Students commencing university often lack the writing, reading and research skills necessary to complete assessment tasks. These skills need to be developed over time (Veit & Gould 2010). Learning the skills of note-taking and paraphrasing are vital if students are to avoid plagiarism in their writing. Veit and Gould (2010, p. 158) emphasise the importance of 'using your own words and your own style' when paraphrasing. There are many different strategies available to students regarding note-taking and paraphrasing. Veit and Gould (2010) suggest a useful strategy to avoid unintentional plagiarism is to rewrite important information in your own words at the time of reading. Students should remember to always record the full details of sources in their notes. Sources can then be accurately acknowledged in the text and in the list of works cited at the end of their paper.

Example 2:

Young drivers are at a greater risk of being injured or killed on our roads than any other demographic (VicRoads 2014). There are a number of safety issues for young drivers, including the issue of distraction. The World Health Organisation (2011, p. 8) defines driver

Report: comparison between Harvard and IEEE referencing styles.

This report describes the differences between referencing standards in Scientific research, as well as the report is not covering the similarities.

Introduction :

For students and researchers reference management is the most strangling issue in their work routine. They must re-type and format all bibliographic information time after time, for each paper, assignment or thesis.

This is especially annoying if changes in the citation styles are in need. As this might happen because supervisors request changes corresponding to the constant need to adjust citation styles since almost every journal and conference has its own requirements; References are managed in many different styles and guidelines such as American Psychological Association (APA), The Harvard reference style,Oxford and Chicago Footnote style, and Institute of Electrical and Electronic Engineers (IEEE) style.

Terminologies :

- Footnotes: area of the page which the reference or quotation that they identify or supplement ends. Located at the bottom of the page[1].
- Citation: a word or piece of writing taken from a written work[2].

Unlike many citing styles there is no official manual, but institutions such as colleges offer their own unique Harvard reference style guide, and each has its own nuances when it comes to punctuation, order of information and formatting rules. Citing your sources will demonstrate to your reader that you have delved deeply into your chosen topic and supported your thesis with expert opinions. If you carefully check your college or publisher's advice and guidelines on citing and stick to this checklist, you should be confident that you will not be accused of plagiarism. In general, "Harvard Style" is another name for the author/date citation system, the custom of using author and date in parentheses, e.g. (Robbins 1987) to refer readers to the full bibliographic citations in appended bibliographies. Some Harvard faculty were among the first practitioners in the late 19th century, and the name stuck, particularly in England and the Commonwealth countries. For a full explanation, please see the Wikipedia article for Parenthetical References; History. The definitive scholarly article on the subject is Chernin C. Create projects, add notes, cite directly from the browser and scan books' barcodes with a mobile app. The Harvard citation style is a system that students, writers and researchers can use to incorporate other people's quotes, findings and ideas into their work in order to support and validate their conclusions without breaching any intellectual property laws. (1988) The 'Harvard System': A mystery dispelled. Ensure that all Harvard citations are in the same font as the rest of the work Reference list titled 'Bibliography' on a separate page at the end of the body of your work Even when using a Harvard citation generator, always check with your professor for specified guidelines – there is no unified style for the formatting of a paper. Carefully have each quote, word-for-word, and place it in inverted commas to differentiate it from your own words. 254–261. It is important to bear in mind that there is a plethora of different citation styles out there – the use of any particular one depends on the preference of your college, subject, professor or the publication you are submitting the work to. Many people use the terms 'reference list' and 'bibliography' interchangeably, and if you are using the Harvard reference style you may be required to provide a bibliography as well as a reference list, so be sure to check this with your tutor. If you're unsure which style you should be using, consult your tutor and follow their guidelines. Got a fast-approaching deadline? Flemming, '78b, p. Make sure you apply consistency throughout your work. Whilst plagiarism is not always intentional, it is easy to accidentally plagiarize your work when you are under pressure from imminent deadlines, you have managed your time ineffectively, or if you lack confidence when putting ideas into your own words. Follow these guidelines when compiling your reference list: Start your reference list on a new page at the end of your document General formatting should be in keeping with the rest of your work Use 'Reference List' as the heading Copy each of your full-length Harvard citations into a list Arrange the list in alphabetical order by the author's last name (titles with no author are alphabetized by the work's title, and if you are citing two or more sources by the same author they should be listed in chronological order of the year of publication) When there are several works from one author or source, they should be listed together but in date order – with the earliest work listed first Italicize titles of books, reports, conference proceedings etc. If your lecturer or department does not ask you to use a particular style, we recommend using the Harvard referencing system because it is simple to use and easy to learn. Find out more here. Scholars find the format an economical way of writing, and it is generally more accessible to the reader as there are no footnotes crowding the page.
